NEW YORK, NY -- (Marketwire) -- 05/10/12 -- Gold miner stock has had a dismal 2012; the Market Vectors Gold Miners ETF has plummeted over 24 percent in the last three months. Bullion prices fell below $1,600 an ounce Tuesday amid fresh concerns of a euro zone debt crisis. "Absent new monetary stimulus, gold doesn't make sense. When people are fearful of the fiat currencies eroding their wealth, that's when gold catches its bid," said Jeffrey Sherman, commodities portfolio manager at DoubleLine Capital. Political uncertainties in Greece and a leadership change in France cause prices for commodities across the board to sink Tuesday. Gold, which investors usually look to as a safe haven during times of political and financial crisis, fell sharply as investors began to question whether Europe would come through with the funding needed to bail out its economy. Analysts predict that gold prices could slide even further as there is little support under the $1,600 an ounce levels. "The fact that support has been broken on a daily, weekly and monthly time frame suggests that this selloff could get worse," said Adam Sarhan, CEO of investment research and consultant Sarhan Capital.
