Analysts at Commerzbank in a recent note to clients stated that European Central Banks is expected to cut interest rates later this week to help ease the region's debt crisis, while China is expected to reduce their banks' minimum reserve-requirement ratios analysts.

Further easing from the Federal Reserve may be a possibility after U.S. manufacturing in June shrank for the first time in almost three years. "Over the last few weeks U.S. numbers have worsened a lot and this has brought about the probability of QE3 -- which is probably the most important reason for the market to believe in gold," said Eugen Weinberg a Commerzbank analyst.
