

AGORACOM Reports 2,263 Investors From 59 Countries Participate In Online Uranium Conference

28.03.2013 | Marketwired

TORONTO, 03/28/13 - AGORACOM, a leading online financial community focusing on the small-cap and mid-cap markets, today announced that 2,263 investors from 59 countries participated in the AGORACOM Online Uranium Conference. The conference, open to uranium investors around the world, featured online presentations from 3 public uranium companies and 5 uranium industry experts, including online Q&A sessions.

The online format of the Uranium Conference provided investors from outside traditional "conference cities" with an opportunity to fully participate in the process by watching presentations and interacting with conference participants - all from the comfort of their computers. No travel, no expenses, no time away from work.

ONLINE CONFERENCE MODEL PROVEN - MORE TO COME IN 2013

AGORACOM Founder, George Tsiolis, stated, "The metrics clearly demonstrate the pent-up demand of uranium investors from around the world to participate in an online conference featuring quality companies and industry experts. Full credit must go to Jim Paterson, CEO of Kivalliq Energy, who first approached me with his vision in late 2012. We agreed that a borderless, online conference was the logical next step if the uranium industry was going to start reaching out to new, bigger audiences. Investors clearly responded, proving they are willing to participate when great information is delivered via convenient access, as opposed to having to travel, spend money and take valuable time away from their lives."

Tsiolis added, "Though I am not surprised, the exceptional results will serve as the basis for additional online conferences in 2013 for the entire small-cap industry."
