Changes to Named Executive Employment Contracts

As was stated in the Company's recently mailed Management Information Circular, the Company anticipated reviewing the terms of its executive employment agreements during 2014 with a view to replacing their single-trigger change of control provisions with double-trigger change of control provisions in accordance with the best corporate governance practices. This process was accelerated in order to permit the Company to report on such changes to shareholders in advance of its AGM.

We are pleased to report that each named executive officer has entered into a new employment agreement with the Company which incorporates double-trigger change of control provisions. In particular, the terms of the new employment agreements require, not only that a Change of Control has occurred but, in addition, that the executive's employment with the Corporation is terminated either without cause by the Corporation or by the executive for "Good Reason". The events that constitute "Good Reason" are those common to such provisions and include a material adverse change in the executive's duties, responsibilities, authority, compensation, or the terms and conditions of the employment of the executive.
