We achieved record cash flow generation, resulting from successful growth capital projects commissioned in the year, and we announced the largest forward-looking growth spending plans in the Company's history," said Stewart Hanlon, Gibson's President and Chief Executive Officer. "As we progress into 2015, we remain mindful of the challenged cash flow situation for many of our customers and are working with them to find solutions that can also optimize utilization of Gibson's integrated assets. Our integrated business model offers resiliency in today's environment. Furthermore, we have good visibility to the cash flow growth associated with our capital projects that are currently underway and we expect industry conditions to stabilize as oil supply and demand fundamentals re-align, providing confidence in the longer term horizon.
