

TradersNewsSource.com - This industry makes a significant contribution to the economic and industrial growth of any country and the major mining metals include copper and aluminium, while the precious metals include gold, IAMGOLD Corp (NYSE: IAG) and silver, Hecla Mining Company (NYSE: HL). The market has been among the fastest growing sectors, though, in recent times, the growth has slowed due to economic slowdown in many countries. Investors interested in precious metals may want to consider these funds as well; VanEck Vectors Gold Miners ETF (NYSE: GDX), Credit Suisse AG/VelocityShares 3x Long Silver ETN (NASDAQ: USLV), and Direxion Shares Exchange Traded Fund Trust (NYSE ARCA: JDST). The trends in the global mining and metals markets will impact all investments in these markets.

The most important sectors for investment include iron ore, gold, copper, silver and nickel because they are premium metals, which will play an important role in future industrial projects.

Many companies are increasingly examining the benefits of vertical integration so that they can control the value chain from mining to production and, to do this, they need to stay in control of operating costs as well as prices.

The global market depends heavily on the economic growth of countries because investments increase in the infrastructure segment and drive the demand for mining metals. Oversupply and low demand, on the contrary, lead to significant price reductions. For example, the slowdown in the Chinese economy has led to sharp falls in the prices of mining metals, especially copper and investments have reduced with ongoing projects being shelved.
