

Aim Exploration To Research Coal Commodity Based Cryptocurrency Coin

13.02.2018 | Newsfile

Henderson, February 13, 2018 - AIM Exploration (OTC Pink: AEXE) (the "Company"), an SEC reporting public company listed as announces today that it includes to its business plan the research and development of a cryptocurrency coin to be backed by the value of its coal reserves.

Aim Exploration has large deposits of approximately 104,000,000 metric tonnes of anthracite coal, according to its Spanish Technical Geological report. The price of anthracite ranges from $100 to $4000 per metric tonne.

Anthracite coal is a clean burning coal desirable for steel making. The Department of Energy of the United States has reported in November 2017 that it has found concentrations of rare earth elements within coal. These rare earth elements are critical in manufacturing cell phones, batteries and high-end electronics.

The Company is studying and researching the ability to create a commodity based digital currency coin. A suitable name is CoalCoin, EnergyCoin or CommodityCoin. We are researching it at this point in time because the company's coal deposits are of considerable value and can be reflected within the cryptocurrency market as well as on the stock market.

Theoretically, We can also create alliances with other coal producers and miners to join in our development of a coal backed coin to make the coal coin valuation stronger.

Due to the recent discovery of rare earth elements, the Company has a plan, following the results of Energy.gov, to investigate whether our deposits have REE deposits to warrant the research and development of a Rare Earth Element coin as well.
