ADM (NYSE: ADM), a global leader in nutrition and agricultural origination and processing, today announced that it has completed its purchase of Deerland Probiotics & Enzymes.

"One of the fundamental structural demand trends driving ADM's growth is consumers' increasing focus on health and well-being, with global demand for health and wellness products estimated at more than $775 billion," said Vince Macciocchi, president of ADM's Nutrition business. "About 4 in 10 global consumers are seeking microbiome ingredients - prebiotics, probiotics and postbiotics - in customized food and beverage products. ADM's global capabilities and portfolio make it the unquestioned provider of choice to meet that demand. From our Protexin and Biopolis businesses in Europe, to our recently-announced proposed joint venture with Vland in China, to this most recent exciting addition of US-based Deerland, ADM today offers a truly global, full-service, science-backed Health & Wellness business that is well positioned to meet fast-growing demand from consumers who are eager for a wide variety of food, beverages and supplements that enhance health and wellbeing."

Deerland Probiotics & Enzymes is a trusted global provider of dietary supplements using probiotic, prebiotic, and enzyme technology, including a line of 12 branded products serving customers in areas including digestive health, immune health, women's health, food intolerance, sports nutrition, cellular repair, and systemic and cardiovascular health. The company's products and solutions include spore probiotics, which offer enhanced stability for a wider use in food and beverage, pet nutrition and supplement applications.

"I'm particularly proud to welcome the Deerland team to ADM," added Macciocchi. "They've built a truly groundbreaking business, and we're excited to work with them to power growth, strengthen ADM's innovation leadership in dietary supplements and functional foods, and serve customers around the world."
