The planned drill program will comprise up to 2,500 meters of diamond drilling, representing the first drill test of targets defined through systematic exploration over the past two years. The project has been advanced by applying systematic deep-sensing geophysics to vector towards anticipated undercover porphyry systems. The drill holes are designed to test various targets across the contiguous project area, where integrated datasets have outlined multiple coincident geophysical anomalies. These anomalies are characterized by: resistivity signatures that could indicate hydrothermal alteration and positive magnetic signatures which could indicate an intrusive body. In addition, the drill tests will further inform the geological interpretation being applied in the target areas.

The Project area aggregates four contiguous exploration licenses covering a total of approximately 306 sq. km. Located 40 to 70 km south of the Bor Mine Complex, this district represents the southern extension of the prolific Timok Magmatic Complex.
