

EQS-News: Norsemont Mining: Gold-silver-copper potential in Chile's Andes, millions of ounces of gold equivalent already drilled

The survivors of the commodity bear market of recent years are now often the most exciting companies. Norsemont Mining (CSE: NOM; Germany: LXZ1) clearly falls into this category. While many explorers had to give up during the lean period, Norsemont used the time to take its flagship Choquelimpie project in northern Chile to a new level. With a massive resource, existing infrastructure, and the entry of "smart money" such as Crescat Capital, the company is positioning itself as one of the most promising gold-silver-copper players in the current commodity cycle.

The Choquelimpie project in northern Chile is no stranger to the spotlight. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, it was one of the country's most important gold and silver mines, operated by heavyweights such as Shell and Northgate Minerals. At that time, over 415,000 ounces of gold and 2 million ounces of silver were produced. However, as is often the case with historic mines, mining did not end when the ore ran out, but due to low commodity prices and the technological limitations of the time.

Today, with gold prices chasing new record highs and a copper market facing a structural deficit, Choquelimpie offers a whole new dynamic.
