Vance and Secretary Rubio.

Clive Massey, CEO of Atomic Minerals, commented:

"The remarks delivered by Vice President Vance and Secretary Rubio underscore the critical importance of minerals in powering the modern economy, supporting national security, and enabling technological progress. Massey continued:

"Atomic Minerals is encouraged by the proactive approach to stabilizing markets, supporting mining projects, and fostering multilateral partnerships. The proposed preferential trade zones and coordinated investment strategies signal a new era of opportunity for producers and consumers alike."

The speech (see you tube link here) highlighted the vital role of critical minerals in everything from renewable energy to advanced manufacturing and defense infrastructure, emphasizing the need for predictable pricing, investment certainty, and diversification of supply sources. Atomic Minerals welcomes this approach and looks forward to contributing to the international efforts to build a secure, resilient, and sustainable minerals ecosystem.

"We applaud the U.S. administration for recognizing that economic security is national security," Massey concluded. "The commitment to practical, enforceable solutions rather than theoretical discussion is precisely what the global minerals industry needs. We are eager to engage with partners around the world to ensure that critical minerals continue to fuel innovation, growth, and prosperity."
