

MCF Energy Update of Recommencement of Welchau-1 Testing

12.02.2026 | CNW

MCF Energy Ltd. (TSXV: MCF) (FRA: DC6) (OTCQX: MCFNF) is pleased to announce an update for the testing of the Welchau-1 well in Austria. MCF holds a 25% interest in the Welchau project, with ADX Energy (ADX) as the operator with the remaining 75% interest.

The Reifling Formation testing was interrupted after perforation in January 2025 due to legal objections by environmental non-governmental organizations in relation to Environmental Clearances provided to ADX for the drilling and testing of Welchau. In September 2025 the Upper Austrian State Administrative Court ruled that ADX may resume drilling and testing activities at the Welchau-1.

The Reifling Formation is the shallowest of four carbonate reservoirs intersected at Welchau-1. An acid stimulation will be performed to test the shallowest potential reservoir encountered in the Welchau-1 well. The testing program is intended to determine if moveable hydrocarbons are present and the flow characteristics of the Reifling Formation which is prognosed to be at or near a light oil accumulation mapped updip of Welchau-1.

The primary testing objectives are to determine the hydrocarbon content and flow characteristics of the Reifling formation. The Reifling Formation is interpreted to be at or near the oil water contact for a light oil accumulation in the Welchau anticline which is mapped approximately 500 metres updip of the Welchau 1 well (refer to Figure 1).

The Welchau-1 well is located in the Northern Calcareous Alps hydrocarbon fairway. It was drilled to test gas and condensate potential within the Middle Triassic fractured carbonate reservoir sequences below the Triassic Lunz-Partnach regional seal complex. The well drilled through a hydrocarbon-bearing complex fractured carbonate reservoir interval with continuous hydrocarbon shows.
